GEO. P. ROWELL & CO'S
SELECT LIST OF LOCAL NEWSPAPERS

An advertiser who spends upwards of $5,000 a year, and who invented less than $200 in this List writes: "Your Select Local List paid me better last year THAN ALL THE OTHER ADVERTISING I DID."

It is not a Co-operative List.
It is not a Cheap List.
It is not a Mushroom List.

The catalogue states exactly what the papers are. Nowhere is the name of a paper in printed in FULL FACE TYPE as in every instance the BEST. When printed in CAPITALS it is the ONLY paper in the place. The list gives the population of every town and the circulation of every paper.

The rates charged for advertising are rarely less than the publishers' schedule. The price for the entire list is $50 a line. This gives one line each week in the entire list is $2. The regular rates of the papers for the same space and time are $4,222.12. The list includes 1,700 newspapers, of which 187 are issued Daily, 1,700 weekly. They are located in 740 cities and towns, of which 36 are State Capitals, 49 places of over 8,000 population, and 1,000 County seats. For copy of List and other information address GEO. P. THE RHODORA.

In May, when the sea-winds pierced our solitudes,
I found the fresh Rhodora in the woods
Spreading its leafless blooms in a damp nook,
To please the desert and the sluggish brook.
The purple petals fallen in the pool
Made the black waters with their beauty gay.
Here might the red-bird come his plumes to cool,
And court the flower that cheapens his array.

Rhodora, if the sages ask thy why
Tell them, dear, that if eyes were made for seeing,
Then beauty is its own excuse for being.
Why were these there, O rival of the rose?
I never thought to ask, I never knew;
But in my simple ignorance suppose
The self-same Power that brought me there brought you. —Emerson.

MISCELLANEOUS.

ROMA.

From Tinsley's Magazine.

It was certainly a veritable antique, not absolutely perfect, still more valuable Prof. Buchanan contemplated it with all the satisfaction of an antiquary confirmed in an original opinion.

It was, after all, a poor thing, at first sight—only a dilapidated looking ornament, an old bracelet spoiled by sea-sand and sea-water.

But in the eye of an antiquarian the disfigurements of age are so many signs of beauty. That the bracelet was bent, that its gold was tarnished and the mosaics with which it was inlaid were partly wanting, was nothing; its antique shape and the magic word "Roma," with which its ancient maker had cunningly engraved it, were quite enough for the Professor.

Moreover, had he not always maintained that the remains on that part of the coast were Roman? His brother Professor, McNaughton, had constantly endeavored to prove that mighty nation had never penetrated so far north.

The ocean itself was witness for the truth, and only 10 days ago this precious relic had been offered to him by a fisherman had brought it to shore in his net.

It was with some difficulty that the Professor could conceal his sense of the value of the bracelet sufficiently to drive a reasonable bargain; but his Scotch prudence prevailed, and in his heart he congratulated himself.

For some years he had spent part of his holiday on this coast, where a far-famed river widened to the sea, and the passing to and fro of the little steamer across its mouth was one of the great events of the day. To day was stormy, and the waves ran high, and even now the Professor had been watching the somewhat rough passage of the boat.

"Overdue," he had said and then he had turned again to inspect his treasure. "I only regret"—so ran his professional thoughts—"that paragraph got into the Modern Athenian of yesterday; that lady Andrew was just premature in sending it. It will anticipate what I was writing to the Antiquary."

"Here's a gentleman speerring for ye," said his rough Scotch domestic at this moment, recalling him rudely to every-day life.

The Professor instinctively replaced the bracelet in an open drawer, and closed the latter quickly before he turned to receive his guest, who proved to be a young man about 20, short, fair, and frank-looking.

"Professor Buchanan, I think?" said this young man with a bow. "I must apologise, sir, for intruding on you. I have called upon you in consequence of a paragraph in the Modern Athenian."

"Deed," said the Professor. "I am glad to hear it, sir. At your age lads are not always so much interested as all that in antiquities. And what will your name be?"

"My name?"—there was perhaps a moment's hesitation on the part of the visitor; his color deepened—"Oh, my name is Henderson, and I—"

"Sit down, Mr. Henderson, sit down. And so you saw the pit passage in the paper; put in with no leave of mine, I must tell you."

"Well, I am very glad it was put in," was the reply, "for it has led to the discovery—"

"A discovery you may well call it, Mr. Henderson," said the Professor, rising and holding the lapels of his coat with both hands. "A discovery confirming that which I have for years maintained, and that is that the remains about here are Roman, and that if we could get leave to excavate we should find—"

"Nay, sir," interrupted Mr. Henderson, with a smile intended to disarm and propitiate; "I am afraid I am not here to confirm your antiquarian theories. I am here—in fact, I am come to tell you that the bracelet described in the Modern Athenian belonged to a lady who wishes to claim it."

"To a leddy?" ejaculated the Professor, becoming more Scotch in his surprise. "To a leddy! Na, na, Mr. Henderson. The leddy that wore that bracelet is away to her grave, and will na claim it."

"But, sir, was the rejoinder, "I assure you I have often seen this lady wear the bracelet described in the paragraph; and she herself has no doubt it is hers. It was brought to her some years ago from Rome. You know they make them on the antique model still. The lady is very anxious to have the bracelet restored to her; and Professor Buchanan is so well known in the antiquarian world that we felt sure he would wish to be undeceived as to the value of an ornament which has no claim to antiquity."

This last settlement was certainly a delicate piece of flattery. The Professor accepted it as a literal statement of the truth.

"Deed, Mr. Henderson," said he, "and that's a fact. But how will I know," [illegible] "that you have brought my credentials with me. Here is my card and here is an exact description of the bracelet."

He handed a card and a piece of paper to the Professor, whose last hopes faded away as he read the minute description of his treasure. He knitted his brows to gain time.

"Of course," said the young man, "it must have become injured by being in the sea."

Though a man of theories, the Professor was candid.

"I am satisfied, young, sir; I was mistaken," said he, resuming his ordinary manner. "And now, may I ask who was the lady who lost it?"

"The lady—oh, well, sir, the lady who sent me here, I will tell you between ourselves, is my sister."

Mr. Henderson reddened again. "And, sir, you not, I hope, mind my asking you to keep this to yourself. There are reasons—"

"Say no more, Mr. Henderson; say no more; you may be sure I will not be ready to tell my mistake. Pretorian here, Pretorian there. There's no lack of Edie Ochiltrees, though the King's bedesmen are extinct."

He opened the drawer, and taking out the bracelet surveyed it rather ruefully.

"Yes, that is it," said Mr. Henderson; but it is a good deal the worse for water. I don't wonder, sir, you were misled. It looks as old as the hills.

The Professor slowly wrapped it in paper and said, as he handed it to the young man—

"And will the lady have dropped it into the sea, young sir?"

"Well, she knew it was here, directly she read the paragraph, and—

"Well, I am no asking to know more," said the elder man.

"And now I must be off, sir, with many thanks from my sister and myself for your kindness; but first, you must be good enough to let me know what I owe you. I know what these fishing fellows are, and how they swindle one."

The Professor, however, obdurately refused to satisfy Mr. Henderson's curiosity on this point, and he found it impossible to urge the matter further. It might have been that he now blushed to own to having given a sum which at the time seemed moderate, but anyway the Professor would only restore the bracelet as a gift to Miss Henderson.

It pleased him evidently to have his way on this point. And if he was left alone with a shattered theory, he was not without a compensating gleam of modern interest.

"I liked the laddie well," thought he, as he again watched the leaving boat, "and if his sister had been as wise-like she would not have lost her jewels in the sea."

II.

Our friend the Professor did not always take his holiday in Scotland. There are other parts of the world in which the remains are undoubtedly Roman, and in which, if there is nothing for an antiquarian to prove, there is everything for him to enjoy. Such a place the good Professor found the land of Provence, where he was disposed to linger about 16 months after the date of his interview with Mr. Henderson. He arrived at Nimes one day, having with great difficulty torn himself away from Arles—Arles, where the pagan relics confirm, as it were, the Christian tradition, being of necessity so much older.

He has been—how he it spoken—to a course de fourmage on Sunday in the amphitheatre; he had inspected St. Trophieme, and done justice to the Forum. He had lingered yet longer for the sake of the library of Mont Majeur; but on the evening of a hot day in May he found himself at Nimes, too late for anything in the way of sight-seeing, but in time for the table d'hote. The plates on his right hand were empty; that on his left was occupied by a French gentleman who spoke such good English that he and the Professor were soon engaged in a discussion on the language of Provence. Between discussing this topic and discussing his dinner, he was for some time so deeply engaged that he hardly noticed that the seats next to him had become filled, and that his immediate neighbor was a lady, until his friend, finding one of his assertions disputed by a spectacled savant opposite, burst into a stream of French so fluent, rapid, imperative, and idiomatic, that the Professor lost the thread. Not till then, I say, did our friend become conscious of a memory—not altogether pleasant—the memory of a mistake. Even as he set down his glass of vin ordinaire, what was it that made him recall what he had so long forgotten—Mr. Henderson, Edie Ochiltree, Pretorian here Pretorian there?

It was not a bracelet. What was it that immediately convinced the Professor that it was the bracelet? I hardly know, unless it was the sensitiveness of his antiquarian consciences. From whatever cause it arose, it is certain that he at once jumped to a conclusion, and glanced behind the lady, who was so composedly taking her soup, to her companion.

Not Mr. Henderson. It is a question whether the Professor was more puzzled or relieved. Not Mr. Henderson; a man older, darker, handsomer. Well, the "laddie" had said it was from his sister he came, and, after all, was not this lady rather like him? A bride, no doubt. He had the curiosity to look at her third finger, as well as her wrist. There was the magic circle, and young, too, and pretty, with an air of composed happiness which it did him good to see.

He made a little advance in bending her the salt. She turned and looked at him with the sweetest gray eyes he had ever seen, and a few minutes after they had entered into conversation. She and her husband had spent the winter in Nice, she told to him, and were now going to the Pyrenees. That day they had been to the Roman baths and to the Amphitheatre, and she grew merry over the recital of the way she had teased the cicerone of the latter.

"I told him," she said, "that the amphitheatre at Verona was far more perfect, and hurt his feelings dreadfully. You really must take pity on him to-morrow, and restore his self-esteem, for he is quite part of the show."

As she spoke her eyes sparkled, and the Professor began to think it would be interesting to have his conjecture confirmed.

He led the conversation further and further into the realm of the past, and the young husband and wife followed him with intelligence. He was deep in his favorite topic, when he was both amused and non-plussed by the gentleman's referring to a paper on Roman antiquities, read before the Society of Antiquaries, and asking him if he agreed with one of the theories put forward.

"Dead," said the Professor, "I more than agree. I originated it."

"Indeed!" replied the gentleman, with an interested air. "I fancied it had been original on the Professor's part."

"That it was," said our friend, with dry humor. "I was the originator."

"Oh, then I am speaking to Professor Buchanan," said the younger man. "I beg your pardon, Sir."

"No, indeed, Sir," replied the Professor, with a polite bow.

Instinctively at this moment his eyes fell on the bracelet. Was it the same association of ideas which caused it to be nervously turned by its wearer, and which called so becomingly a blush to her cheek? She glanced at her husband, and he, too, seemed to have some consciousness connected with the Professor's name, shown, however, only by a moment's pause before he said:

"We are indeed fortunate to meet such a distinguished countryman. Do you remain here any time?"

"I am not limited to time," said the Professor, "that is not my idea of enjoyment."

The lady had somehow become silent; she was engaged with her poulet. The French gentleman again opened fire, and the Professor's attention was distracted from his right-hand neighbors. He noticed their departure, for they bowed with pointed politeness, and he shortly after passed into the salon de lecture to look at Galignani.

It was, perhaps an hour later that the young husband returned, and, again entering into conversation, asked him if he would like to come into their salon and look at some photographs, as he and his wife were leaving Nimes next morning, and they would both like to see him again.

"My name is Montrevor," said he, as he led the way to their room; "and we are at the end of a long wedding tour."

Mrs. Montrevor greeted the Professor with a smile. She had ordered coffee, and as the three sat near the open window the Professor could not but admire the sweet face and fresh grace of the young wife.

He looked over the photographs, and might have become too discursive on their merits had not Mrs. Montrevor with a glance at her husband, said:

"I have wished to thank you myself, Professor Buchanan, for restoring to me what I so much value."

As she spoke she handed to him the ornament to which I have so often referred and her husband said:

"I do not wonder you took it for a true antique, it was so much injured. Now you see it has a more modern air."

"Deed, said the Professor, who was handling the trinket; "we will, if you please, say no more of my mistake. Then, madam," with his old-fashioned courteous bow, "I had a theory which I was too glad to have confirmed, and I must confess that the word 'Roma' was too much for me. Now I see it in a fresh light, and I assure you it pleases me more than any discovery to find I have been of slight service to you."

Mrs. Montrevor smiled. She certainly had a wonderful smile, and there was an indescribable air of quiet content in the way in which she said, as she reclasped her bracelet:

"Yes, I am very glad to have it again."

"And how did you lose it in the sea?" said the Professor, who had always felt a curiosity on this point.

The lady did not answer; she was arranging the lace at her wrist.

"She did not lose it," said her husband. "I threw it into the sea myself. Well, my dear," in answer to a glance from her, "you would thank the Professor yourself, so he may as well hear the whole story, and that is, sir," said Mr. Montrevor, "that I pitched it in myself—I did indeed. I had parted from this lady, who is now my wife; I was wretched in spirits, and I was determined that at least no one else should ever wear the present she had returned to me. And then she saw the paragraph in the paper, and guessed what I had done; and so by your means it came back to her."

"It was an omen," said a quiet voice. The husband's eyes brightened; he gave a short laugh.

"The omen is fulfilled, you see, or we should not have met you here."

"Thanks to the word 'Roma,'" said the Professor.

Protection Against Fire.

In building new houses lay a flooring of thin sheet iron over the joists and the wood upon that, and sheathe the stairs with the same material. This is the advice of the eminent sculptor, Hiram Powers, who says that during a thirty-four years' residence in Florence, Italy, he never knew of a single house being burned, because there all the floors above and below are covered by thin brick tiles, which prevent ventilation, and a fire cannot rise and burst into flames. A Boston chemist recommends that in all wooden buildings the wood should be covered with canvas painting. He says the fire test never fails which [illegible] work, loosely arranged, and full of draught channels. Let him find everything plugged tight with mortar.

Wickedness.

Brother Gardner in Detroit Free Press.

"How wicked we am when we sot down and fink it ober," said Brother Gardner as the voice of the triangle struck the hour of seven. "While I keep tryin' to believe in Heaben, I keep wonderin' how any of us we ebber git dar. We mus' not envy, an' yit we do envy. We mus' not b'ar false witness, an' yit we am forever stretchin' de truf. We mus' not lie, an' yit it comes so handy dat we can't help it. We mus' not steal, an'—an' some of us don't. Dat is, we doan' get inter a position to handle de funds. We mus' not be jealous, an' yit when de woman across de way, whose husband airns $6 per week, sails out wid fo' new bonnets a y'ar, an it beams better'n her old woman to look artin' her an' not wish she had hold of her back ha'r? We mus' not sw'ar, and yit what am I to do when I strike the end of the sidewalk plank wid my fut or whack my thumb wid de hammer? Am it to be supposed dat I will calmly set down an' sing a gospel hymn? When we trade hosses wid a man we cheat him. When a man wants to borry half a dollar of us we lie to him. We play keards, dance, go to de theatre an' circus an' we doan' turn our backs on a dog fight. I tell you we am all poo', weak human bein's, an' eben while we flatter ourselves dat we am climbin' 'long to'rds Heaben at de rate of a mile a minute, we am all ready to pass a lead nickel on a street kyar company or pocket de $3 bill foun' in de post office. When I sot down at night an' pull off my butes an' put my feet in de oven and get to thinkin' of how hard I try to be good, an' how pow'ful easy it is to be bad, I become so absorbed in my thoughts dat de ole woman has to hit me on de ear wid a tater to bring me back to airth an' start me out arter an' armful of wood. Gem'len, let us continer to be sagols, but let us count on wrestlin' wid Satan about fo'ty times a day an' on bein' frown flat on our backs ebery blessed time. We will now irritate de usual order of bizness."

Best He Could Do.

It was a Michigan man riding through West Virginia on horseback, and one after noon as he came along to a settler's cabin on the mountain road he asked of a man leaning over the gate: "Can you tell me how far it is to the town ahead?" "I reckon I kin, strang-er. You'll have to peg along fur about nine miles yit." "But it is nearly dark. Is there no tavern on the road?" "Never heard of any, and I've backed my cornmeal over this road risin' of twenty years." "But perhaps I could put up somewhere?" "P'raps ye could. There's Steve Taylor's, down about four miles, but he'd beat ye blind on old sledge. There's Mose Smith, a mile higher, but Mose would feel offended if we didn't trade him that hoss fur a stub tailed mule. Might put up at Green's, but there's lots of rattlesnaks around his place. Kurnel Johnson is down about six miles, but the Kurnel would turn ye all out doors at midnight if he found that you didn't vote his way." "But what am I to do?" "Waal, I'm a squar' man, stranger, and the best I kin do is to ax ye to stop here with me, an' to tell ye beforehand that if ye ar' awakened in the night by shingles bein' ripped off and logs pulled down it won't be an avalanche nor a cyclone, but only mos'n the old woman a-tryin' for the two hundredth time since the war to see who handles the money when I sell two coonskins for a dollar!" "I—I guess I'll go on," faltered the rider. "Ke-rect, stranger! The last man who stopped here said he wished he'd have run the chances with the snakes down at Green's an' I gin him my hand when he rode off. I'm squar' up and down, as I told ye, and Green's is the third cabin on this side arter ye cross the creek"—Detroit Free Press.

The Philosopher and the Flea.

This is the tale of the philosopher and the flea:

I. The former, having been bitten by the latter, seized and was about to dispatch his foe, when he reflected that the little insect had only acted from instinct and was not to be blamed. Accordingly he deposited the flea on the back of a passing dog.

II. The dog was the poodle of a lady, and she was very fond of the pretty animal. On his return to the house his mistress took him upon her lap to caress him, and the flea embraced the opportunity to change his habitat.

III. The flea having in the course of the night engaged in active business operations, awakened the lady. Her husband was sleeping peacefully beside her, and in the silence of the chamber she heard him in his dreams whisper with an accent of ineffable tenderness a name! The name was that of her most intimate female friend!!

IV. As soon as it was day the outraged wife hurried to the house of her rival and told the rival's husband of the big, big d—ing discovery she had made. He, being a man of decision, at once called out the destroyer of his household's peace and ran him through.

V. The widow, when her husband was taken home to her upon the medium of a shutter, was so terribly smitten with remorse that she precipitated herself from the fourth story window.

VI. The other lady convinced her husband that he had wronged her by entertaining any suspicions as to her fidelity, and becoming reconciled with him, seized an early opportunity of poisoning him.

VII. Inasmuch as the jurors of that country had never heard of "extenuating circumstances," and the Chief Magistrate thought that he could put a murderer to better uses than not guillotining him, the guilty woman was duly decapitated, and the sole survivors of the tragedy were the Philosopher and the Flea.—*N. Raising Potatoes from Sprouts.

Concerning the raising of potatoes from sprouts, an English contemporary has the following: Potato growing has been the object of a curious experiment just completed in England. A pound of early potatoes was taken and allowed to sprout freely. From each potato a sprout was broken, and sprouts and potatoes were then planted in seperate rows. Both grew well, and the following is the result of the experiment: From the sprouts, which weighed in all half an ounce, five pounds five ounces of sound potatoes have been obtained, and from the potatoes five pounds four ounces, showing a slight balance in favor of the sprouts. The sprout potatoes were more regular in shape and earlier in growth.

Hamilton's Oriental Balm.

Or Magical Beautifier, removes all pimples, freckles and skin blemishes; and gives a clear, transparent complexion, while its ingredients of opodeldoc is such that the use of a cosmetic is not suspected. Worms! Worms!

Children having worms require immediate attention, as neglect of the trouble often causes prolonged sickness. In children worms are indicated by paleness, itching of the nose, grinding of the teeth, starting in sleep, irregular appetite, bad breath, swelled upper lip, and other symptoms. Get a box of Parmelee's Worm Candies or Lozenges. They are a safe, pleasant and effectual remedy. Price, 25 cents per box. Sold by A. B. Armstrong, Smethport, Pa.

A Common Mistake.

To consider as consumption what is really an affection of the liver. To keep your liver healthy and your blood pure and thus avoid many distressing complaints, use Parmalee's Great Blood and Liver Purifier. It cures sick and nervous headache, and indigestion, and removes all unhealthy bilious secretions of the stomach and bowels. For costiveness no medicine is so effectual; also for bad breath, sour stomach, etc. A positive guarantee of no cure, no pay. Price per bottle, $1; sample bottles, 15 cents. Sold by A. B. Armstrong, Smethport, Pa.

The Human Locomotive

Should be carefully engineered, otherwise it may run off the track of life at any moment. To keep its delicate internal machinery in perfect trim, or put it in good working condition, use Parmelee's Dyspepsia Compound. The tone and vigor which it imparts to the stomach, its appetising effects, the relief it affords in headache, its anti-bilious properties, and its superior merits as a general corrective, make it the most valuable family medicine of the age. Price per bottle, $1; sample bottles, 15 cents. Sold by A. B. Armstrong, Smethport, Pa.

SEEK

health and avoid sickness. Instead of feeling tired and worn out, instead of aches and pains, wouldn't you rather feel fresh and strong?

You can continue feeling miserable and good for nothing, and no one but yourself can find fault, but if you are tired of that kind of life, you can change it if you choose.

How? By getting one bottle of BROWN' IRON BITTERS, and taking it regularly according to directions.

Mansfield, Ohio, Nov. 26, 1881.

Gentlemen:—I have suffered with pain in my side and back, and great soreness on my breast, with alternating pains all through my body, attended with great weakness, depression of spirits, and loss of appetite. I have taken several different medicines, and was treated by prominent physicians for my liver, kidneys, and spleen, but I got no relief. I thought I would try Brown's Iron Bitters; I have now taken one bottle and a half and am almost well—pain in side and back all gone, appetite all out of my bounds, and I have a good appetite, and am gaining in strength and flesh. It can justly be called the King of medicines.

JOHN K. ALLEMAN.

BROWN'S IRON BITTERS is composed of Iron in soluble form; Cinchona the great tonic, together with other standard remedies, making a remarkable non-alcoholic tonic, which will cure Dyspepsia, Indigestion, Malaria, Weakness, and relieve all Lung and Kidney diseases.

REPUBLICAN STATE TICKET.

For Governor,
GENERAL JAMES A. BEAVER.
For Lieut.-Governor,
W. T. DAVIES,
of Bradford County.
For Supreme Judge,
WILLIAM HENRY RAWLE,
of Philadelphia.
For Secretary of Internal Affairs,
CHARLES M. GREER,
of Butler.
For Congressman-at-Large,
THOMAS M. MARSHALL, of Allegheny.

OUR CANDIDATES.

The ticket nominated at the Harrisburg convention appears to have given satisfaction to Republicans generally, and it is conceded that it is a strong one and fairly represents the different sections of the party. It remains to be seen what the Independents will do with it, but if they are true to the basis of the agreement made at the Philadelphia conference and carried out at the Harrisburg convention, they should endorse it heartily. To the men upon it no objection can be taken personally, as their public and private lives are spotless, while politically, their choice by the Republican delegates proves them to be representative men of the party as a whole. The subjoined sketch of the personnel of the ticket will give an insight to the fitness of the men nominated:

General James A. Beaver was born in Millerstown, Perry county, Pa., Oct. 21, 1837, and is therefore in his forty-fifth year. He comes of a family long identified with the history of the State, the head of the family having come to Pennsylvania from Alsace not long after William Penn's treaty with the Indians. The father of the subject of this sketch died when his son was only three years old, and the latter was brought up by his grandfather, who lived in Mifflin county. The boy attended Jefferson college, Cannonsburg, Washington county, and graduated with honors in 1856, at the age of nineteen. He read law at the office of Hon. H. N. McAllister, at Bellefonte, to which place he removed. Upon his admission to the bar, he became the partner of his distinguished preceptor. While studying law he became a member of the Bellefonte Fencibles, and was chosen Second-Lieutenant. At the outbreak of the war the company entered the service, and young Beaver was chosen First-Lieutenant. At the expiration of their term he helped recruit the Forty-fifth Pennsylvania Infantry and became its Lieutenant-Colonel. He was shortly afterwards given the Colonelcy of the One Hundred and Forty-Eight, and in May, 1863, was severely wounded at Chancellorsville, and as soon as he could bear the fatigue of the journey he was sent to Harrisburg, and during the Gettysburg crisis took command of Camp Curtin. He was made Brigade Commander at Cold Harbor and was wounded, but not seriously, and at Petersburg was very seriously hurt by the explosion of a shell. After his recovery he again took command of his Brigade on the eve of action at Ream's Station, and was scarcely on the field before he was again hit and so badly that his leg had to be amputated. Gen. Beaver then retired from active service; was mustered out in 1865 and returned to Bellefonte, where he engaged actively in law practice and married. He took a prominent place in politics at once, and his brilliant and forcible oratory has given him a national reputation. Gen. Beaver is a powerful and impressive speaker, and he has been on the stump in nearly every State in the North in many National campaigns. He was one of the commission which supervised the building of the Insane Hospital, at Warren, Pa. He is a member of the Board of Trustees of the Pennsylvania State College, in Centre County. He is also a member of the Board of Trustees of Washington and Jefferson College at Washington, Pa., the institution from which he was a graduate. He is a member of the Board of Trustees of Lincoln University, at Oxford, Pa. He has ever taken a great interest in the State militia, and was commissioned by General Geary as a Brigadier-General in the National Guard. He now commands the Second Brigade, which comprises all the troops in the Western section of the State. It has been well said of General Beaver that "to this brilliant military and civil record he adds powers of mind second to few in the State. His social life and personal character is without a flaw. No friend or foe has ever questioned his valor, integrity, purity of character or broad intelligence. What more need be said of a man?"

Senator William T. Davies was born in Glamorganshire, Wales, December 20, 1831. In early life he emigrated to this country, and after obtaining a rudimentary schooling entered the Oswego Academy, New York, where he was educated. After graduating he read law and was admitted to practice in Bradford county. In 1875 he was elected District Attorney for the term of three years, but in 1877 he was chosen Senator for the short term. In 1880 he was re-elected and entered upon his present four years' term with the beginning of the last session of the Legislature.

Senator John M. Greer was born in Jefferson township, Butler county, on the 24 of August, 1844. He attended the public schools of the neighborhood until qualified for a higher standard of education than they afforded, when he entered upon an academic course. After completing this branch he entered upon the study of law and was admitted to the bar of his native county in 1867. He was elected District Attorney and served

William Rawle, Jr., whose reports of the decisions of the Pennsylvania Supreme Court gave him enduring reputation in his profession. Mr. Rawle is a graduate of the University of Pennsylvania of the class of '41, and was admitted to the bar in 1846, and is distinguished both as a practitioner and as an author on legal subjects, his published works being numerous and valuable. Mr. Rawle has never held any political or judicial office, though he has exerted his personal influences in behalf of reform in political methods and has been especially outspoken against corruption in municipal affairs.

Thomas M. Marshall was born in Ireland, in county Derry, about 19 miles from Londonderry. He is the youngest of eleven children, eight boys and three girls, and is about sixty years old. His sister is the mother of Major Brown. His father came to this country when Tom was about two months old, bringing his entire family with him. For about a year he lived in Pittsburg, when he bought a farm in Butler county and moved there, taking his family also. Tom lived on the farm until he was ten or twelve years old, when he came to Pittsburg and took up his residence with his brother James, who had a grocery store on Liberty street, near the foot of Sixth avenue. He went to school and assisted his brother in the store. Eventually he engaged in business for himself as a wholesale grocer, but the occupation was not congenial. While merchandizing he studied law.

When about 25 years old he was admitted to the bar, and henceforth gave himself exclusively to the practice of the law, which accorded more with his literary tastes than trade and commerce. His legal preceptor was Charles Shaler. The only public office he has ever held was Councilman. He served four years, being once elected by the Whigs and once by the anti-Knownothings. He has from early manhood been a hard worker in the Republican party.

A GREAT deal of the political matter that appears in newspapers, purporting to be the results of interviews with prominent men is nothing but imaginative on the part of penny-a-liners who endeavor to create sensational articles out of very small capital. A case in point came up the other day when Mr. William Henry Rawle, the Republican candidate for Supreme Judge, was annoyed and considerably chagrined on learning that he had been unwittingly interviewed by a newspaper reporter and made to say that Senator Cameron's politics were damnable. Mr. Rawle lost no time in informing a Philadelphia journal that he had said nothing of the kind, and his statement was made public.

IT is said that the judges have agreed and that Guiteau's last chance is gone. The official announcement of the action of the Court in Banc will be given on the 22nd inst. Guiteau is reported as much affected by the supposed decision of the court in banc. He talks but little, but appears to recognize the serious situation and has said since Monday that he relied upon executive clemency.

ON Saturday the Senate Select Committee on Woman Suffrage, by a vote of 3 to 2, agreed to recommend to the Senate for adoption Senator Lapham's joint resolution proposing the amendment to the Constitution allowing women the right to vote at all elections.

THE late assassination of Cavendish and Burke in Dublin is now looked upon as a deliberate political plot, and an answer to England latest message of peace. A large reward has been offered for the apprehension of the murderers.

THOMAS E. COCHRAN, ex-Attorney-General of this State, died on Tuesday last.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

FROM OUR REGULAR CORRESPONDENT.

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 15, 1882.

Unless the sentiment of the Senate is very different from that of the House we shall soon have a new Cabinet officer, to be known as the Secretary of Agriculture. The work so energetically pursued by Mr. Le Duc while he was Commissioner is likely to be crowned with success long after that worthy but visionary person has followed into obscurity his non-producing tea-plants and experimental toad-stools. But Le Duc is not the first Commissioner who aimed to exalt the honors of his office. Ever since the creation of the Department of Agriculture the Commissioner of that bureau for the time being has been ambitious to be made a Cabinet officer, and through himself and his friends has constantly agitated the subject before Congress. The first Commissioner, Mr. Newton, took the view that he was entitled to rank as a Cabinet officer under the bill creating the Department of Agriculture, and demanded that he should be admitted to the Cabinet councils as a full member. The President who appointed him did not recognize his pretensions and he had to go to Congress. Bills have been frequently introduced in the two Houses to make the head of the department a Cabinet officer. They have been discussed from time to time, but have generally been looked upon more with ridicule than seriousness. When Dr. Loring, the present Commissioner, was appointed, his friends said he would never rest until he had succeeded where all his predecessors had failed. He is a man of wealth and of fine address, and since his incumbency has entertained as handsomely as almost any one in Washington. It is an adage as old as the hills that arguments addressed to the stomach are most forcible. It may be that the truth of the old adage is again made manifest in the fact that the House, with only seven dissenting votes, passed a bill to make the Commissioner of Agriculture a Cabinet officer, or it may be that the motive and the cause of such remarkable unanimity of sentiment is to be found in the fact that the Commissioner is the "only practical agriculturist," according to the terms of the bill. Originally it was intended that there should be four bureaus in the new department, and that one or two sub-divisions should be taken from other executive departments of the Government to increase the importance of these. As passed, however, the bill provides for only three bureaus, the sub-divisions of which already exist, in form more or less definite, in the department of Agriculture, today. The Bureau of Agricultural Products is to include botany, chemistry, and entomology. These divisions already form the better part of the present Department of Agriculture, the first two being important practical branches, while the third, although of real value, is the subject of great mirth to the non-agricultural members of Congress, who consider it great fun to ridicule the division of "bugology" of the Department of Agriculture. The Bureau of Animal Industry is to be in charge of a veterinary surgeon, and embraces in its duties the investigation and reports concerning the number, condition, and value of the domestic animals in the country, and shall provide for their protection from diseases and collect and disseminate information relative to breeding, importation, and improvement of stock. The Bureau of Lands and Statistics is to report on the resources and capabilities of lands suitable for stock-raising. A second division of this bureau is to be devoted to the collection of labor and agricultural statistics and crop reports; while a third division is to be employed in the collection and circulation of information and statistics relating to forestry, the demand and supply of timber and the preservation of forests being made its especial care. This synopsis will not impress any one familiar with the operations and conduct of the present Department of Agriculture with the idea that a new and original work is to be undertaken, or that the labors of the department, as now carried on, are to be materially expanded and dignified.

The Democrats have had rather a hard time over the Tariff Commission bill and some of them are disposed to be severe on those of their party who voted for the bill. The majority believed that by insisting upon an immense revision of the tariff system the party would gain an advantage, or at least be consistent; but they have come to grief in this as in the anti-Chinese measure. It was a great disappointment to them when the President signed the latter bill, for all their visions of political capital have thereby vanished. Congress is getting along fairly with the other work before it, and will doubtless be ready to adjourn a month hence. Such wet, gloomy, cold and dismal spring weather as we are having this month has not been known here before within the memory of your humble servant, nor of the oldest inhabitant.

Important Newspaper Decisions.

A postmaster is required to give notice by letter, (returning a paper does not answer the law) when a subscriber does not take his paper out of the office, and state the reason for it is being taken, and a neglect to do so makes the postmaster responsible to the publishers for the payment.

Anyone who takes a paper from the post office whether directed to his name or another, or whether he has subscribed or not, is responsible for the pay.

If a person orders his paper discontinued he must pay all arrearages, or the publishers may continue to send it until payment is made, and collect the whole amount, whether it be taken from the office or not. There can be no legal discontinuance until the payment is made.

If a subscriber orders his paper to be stopped at a certain time and the publisher continues to send it, the subscriber is bound to pay for it, if he takes it out of the post office. The law presumes upon the ground that a man must pay for what he uses.

The courts have decided that refusing to take newspapers and periodicals from the post office or removing and having them called for, is prima facie, evidence of intentional fraud.

HERE AND HEREABOUTS.

—Some people say the circus bill-board ought to be insured.

—Port Allegany having been made a borough, now wants a fire company.

—Mr. W. R. Bronson was in town on Wednesday and to-day, visiting his numerous friends.

—There was a total eclipse of the sun on Wednesday, visible, however, only in the eastern hemisphere.

—Frank Taylor stayed at the Grand Central on Wednesday night—some of the borders found it out.

—The circus bill-board on the site of the burned Bennett House is an attraction for the young folks.

—Messrs. Sterrett & Rose are fitting up an office in the Grand Central building, upstairs over the billiard room.

—The fine weather we are enjoying is an agreeable change from the cold, wet and dismal weather of last week.

—In about ten days the Court House grounds will be finished and the fountains playing—so say the commissioners.

—We learn from the Harrisburg Telegraph that Smethport is to be lighted and heated by natural gas. It is the first we have heard of it.

—One hundred and fifty thousand cords of bark are to be peeled in Tioga county, Pa., this year. This will be the product of about 18,000 acres of timber.

—There is to be a great Knight templar demonstration in Philadelphia, to commemorate the landing of William Penn on the shores of the Delaware, 200 years ago.

—"Doc" Sprague, General Hamar and a party of Bradford sports, started for the fishing grounds this morning, and will lay siege to the trout. May good luck attend them.

—By reference to our advertising columns it will be seen that Mr. W. H. Read, of Farmer's Valley offers for sale his valuable farm of sixty acres, ten of which are improved.

—Mr. Norman D. Goe applies for license for the Grand Central Hotel at the next court. Mr. Goe has made himself quite popular with the guests during his management of the hotel.

—While pigeoners in this section are having poor luck, it is reported that those in Wisconsin are meeting with the reverse. There is one roost near Sparta in that State said to be a half-mile wide and ten miles long, and the trappers are catching them wholesale.

—Baldwin's Official Railway Guide for May is at hand. It is a very valuable publication for travelers on the railroads of New York and Western Pennsylvania, and is published by Nauert & Co., 30 Main street, Buffalo, at $1.00 per year, single copies ten cents.

Frank Lemox, a young man employed in the stave mill at Frisbee station met with a serious accident on Thursday of last week, by letting his left hand come in contact with the saw. Dr. Freeman dressed the hand after amputating one finger, and the young man is doing as well as could be expected.

Those from this place who attended the Forepaugh circus at Olean last week were greatly disappointed. The state of the weather prevented the gathering together of the whole of the menagerie and circus paraphernalia at one spot, and the exhibition is said to have been "very thin."

An exchange says: "Collect some soot from a chimney or a stove where wood is used as fuel, put into an old pitcher and pour hot water on it. When cool use it to water your plants every few days. The effect upon plants is wonderful in producing a rapid growth of thrifty shoots and a greater number of thick, richly-tinted leaves.

—These swindlers are now abroad in the land selling carpets to farmers. The "order" which the honest granger signs for a carpet cheaper than the town merchant can sell it, eventually comes back a full fledged promissory note at 30 days, with six per cent. interest.

—Commissioner Palmer dropped into the MINER office on Wednesday. He gave us the information that the dials for the Court House clock have been purchased of the Howard Clock Co., of Boston, which company will very shortly put them up and set the clock in running order.

—The new Bradford short line, which lessens the distance between Bradford and Oil City to ninety six miles, was formally opened on Wednesday, a large force of railroad men, reporters and invited guests had been invited and had a pleasant excursion and refreshments to their hearts content.

—Let the young ladies beware of marriage brokers. An Ithaca young lady answered the "ad." of a firm of these individuals, and soon after received a demand for $26.50 for advertising with the threat if she did not pay her letter would be printed. Of course payment was preferable to an exposure, and their cowardly game netted them the $26.50. Whether the answer to such advertisements be in fun or not, the result is the same.

THE DEATH OF MABEL STARK.

Her Remains Sent from New York and Interred in the Marvin Creek Cemetery.

On Tuesday afternoon last the remains of Mabel Stark were interred in the Marvin Creek Cemetery, the funeral services taking place from the residents of her parents in this place, and the cortege consisted of a number of her relatives and friends. The news of her untimely decease created quite a shock among those who knew her and remembered her for her vivacity, grace, amiability and accomplishments. Concerning the circumstances attending her death and the transportation of her remains from New York, we clip the following from yesterday's Era:

"Observant loiterers around the Union depot on the arrival of the train from New York, on Monday noon, could have noticed a young man parading with an unsteady step up and down the platform, while upon his countenance was stamped the outlines of the grief he had been suddenly called upon to bear. He was there in answer to the summons of two telegraph messages from New York, and forwarded to his brother-in law in Smethport. The first was received on Friday noon and contained the doleful words, "Mabel dead. Please send instructions." The second message came on Saturday and was worded "Remains sent by express to Smethport." This was signed by a New York undertaker. The sender of the first telegram was a young doctor by the name of E. L. Ernhout, until quite recently a resident of Wilcox, Elk county, and the person to whom it had reference was Mabel Stark, aged twenty three years. She was the next in years to the youngest of five girls and one boy, children of Mr. and Mrs. Warren J. Stark. Years ago when railroads were unthought of in McKean, Elk and certain portions of Cattaraugus county Mr. Stark and his wife emigrated to this country and settled on a farm on Marvin creek, a few miles outside of Smethport. Being frugal and industrious they prospered in their every undertaking, and at one time the Starks were considered to have as much wealth as their more pretentious neighbors. Mr. Stark, from the time he became a resident of the county, entertained the idea that a stage route from Smethport to Olean, Alton and Wilcox would be a paying investment, and ten years ago he put stages on the road between these respective points. His most sanguine expectations were fulfilled, and he coined money from his enterprise. In the hey day of his prosperity troubles arose in the Stark family over which he had no control and as the turmoil increased instead of abating, the old man neglected his farm and stage routes. Bankruptcy followed, and one day seven years ago he saw the fruits of his years of toil pass from his hands into those of others under the hammer of the Sheriff. Since then luck has been against him, and he has never been able to redeem himself.

During all his misfortunes the tender love and regard Mr. Stark entertained for his children was never allowed to falter, and he has been known to refuse himself necessary comforts to cater to their desires. Four or five years ago when stories were set afloat in the quiet little hamlet reflected on the virtue of his daughter, Mabel, it was a severe blow on the loving father, and this with his other troubles completely upset him. Mabel was petite in stature, of pleasing form and being blessed with a pretty face and a luxuriant head of black hair she was never without admirers. She was a regular visitor to Bradford, and while attending the parties of a social club two years ago a married man, then doing business on Main street, became enamored with Mabel. The favors of the family man were accepted by the girl, and their actions became so public that a big row is known to have occurred between the husband and wife. Friends who were called in to pacify the turbulent household say that the man declared then that he loved Mabel better than he did his wife. He added that he would kill Mabel if she deserted him, and a few months later the girl showed letters to acquaintances bearing threats of this description from her amorous admirer. Early last summer the intimacy existing between the two was broken off and Mabel remained mostly in Smethport. Her beauty and fascinating ways set up side down the heart of Dr. E. L. Ernhout, the young physician from Wilcox, and the same that sent the sad telegram from New York, and he begged to be permitted to become a suitor. He was accepted, and then the tongues of the busy bodies and scandal mongers wagged with unceasing vigor. At first the two lovers paid no attention to the scathing remarks, but last fall the assertions and allegations made were too much for Mabel to stand. Desperate and disheartened she fled to New York city, [illegible]

Two months ago Dr. Ernhout disappeared suddenly from Wilcox, and nothing was known of his whereabouts until six weeks ago, when he was seen in the company of Mabel at New York by a prominent McKean county official. About this time Mabel wrote to her parents, saying that she had become the wife of Ernhout, but was reticent as to their future. Nothing more was heard from her again until the reception of the intelligence of her death from Ernhout on Friday. The casket containing the remains of the unfortunate girl were immediately transferred to Smethport on their arrival in Bradford on Monday, and yesterday they were interred in the cemetery. A large concourse of mourners were present, and the impression considering the suspicious circumstances surrounding Mabel's death and the actions of Ernhout in allowing the body to be forwarded on from New York unattended, prevailed that an investigation should be made that the real facts may be fathomed. The certificate upon which the railroad authorities transported the body contains the signature of Ernhout, who explains that he attended Mabel during her illness and that the cause of her death was heart disease. This explanation is far from satisfactory to the relatives and friends of the deceased, and the question is asked "If Ernhout is her husband, as the girl confessed a few weeks ago, why did he not come on with the remains?" Equally pertinent interrogations are afloat among the townspeople, and it was understood in Smethport yesterday that the brother-in law of Mabel will communicate with the New York police authorities with the hope of shedding some light on the complicated affair. The facts contained in this narrative are presented just as they have been learned by Era reporters, and until something more tangible is brought to the surface the paper refrains from giving any sort of opinion or explanation concerning the sad affair.

The Great Circus Day.

As far as our advices reach, everybody is on tip toe, with eager and well found ed anticipations of a day and evening full of wonderful sights and words of fun, on Saturday the 27th instant, when Hilliard's grand and popular Menagerie will make its grand entree into Smethport, and open its countless treasures for the education, edification and delight of all. The proprietors of this famous undertaking seem to have exhausted every resource and reached the very verge of furthest limit in perfecting a field entertainment—a genuine family show—of most liberal size, variety and interest, and if they are ever surpassed it will not be until new species of animals are created and miraculous powers accorded to aspirants for gymnastic laurels.
